UK Outlook for Saturday 3 Apr 2021 to Monday 12 Apr 2021:
Widely fine conditions are expected across the British Isles on Saturday with plenty of dry weather and sunny spells for most. Temperatures will be around or a little below average for the early part of April, with some chilly nights. It will then likely turn colder and more unsettled for northern regions by the start of the following week. All areas of the UK are likely to see spells of rain at first and accompanying stronger winds, wintry showers are then expected to follow - these heaviest in Scotland and northern England.  Following this cold and unsettled spell, conditions are likely to become more settled with temperatures starting to return back to average towards the end of this period.
